The Way I've Been Treated

I don't have grief
over a body that I used to have.
I don't have none of that born again stuff.
So you can say that's a politicised decision but I hold that my anger is about the way I've been treated because I'm different.

I don't want long arms or a thumb, I'm fine.
But it would be nice to have been treated equally.
So the fury comes from not being treated equally, doesn't it?
That's where I think it comes from.

My Parents

I had a very, very happy childhood, although amongst a sort of broken home.
My mum and my father met playing opposite each other in a tour of the musical 'Salad Days'.

My father was gay,
he'd already had an unsuccessful marriage, he'd been thrown out of the R.A.F.
for having sex with a guy, you know quietly, embarrassedly.

So he was definitely gay,
but he, you know, had a, we came from quite a posh family and there was a lot of family pressure to be straight and sire a son to at least prove, you know, to the outside world that you could fake it.

Sheen Mount

I remember going to Sheen Mount school, (now the poshest primary school in Britain) having lots of friends, one boy called me screwed-up arms, another girl kept telling me she felt sorry for me.

But apart from that I was just the life and soul and part of the gang,
we had a gang I was part of it.
Behind the bike sheds.

I went on fancy dress at eight years old,
I went as a boxer,
with boxing gloves on,
which ostensibly looked like boxing gloves sewn on to your shoulders, you know..

No-one said a word.
Let him be what he wants to be,
his parents have obviously set him on that path.

Whenever I asked something they'd always say,
I don't know, darling,
why don't you try?

Kent College

I was the only disabled boy.
there was one gay boy,
and one black guy and me.
And we didn't like each other.

I have a very, I'm very ashamed to say this,
but it's true and it happened.

One day I saw an Indian boy at school, across the quadrangle.
And I don't know what possessed me,
I just ran the entire length, stood ten yards from him and shouted 'Oi, Paki', as loud as I could, because I wanted everyone to look at him.

And he walked up to me,
punched me in the face.
Which is pretty reasonable under the circumstances.

And I, at home, I thought about the nature of racism for the first time in my life.
It was really weird,
and I thought that was a despicable thing to say.
Why on earth did I do that?

I know why I did it now.
I was just a desperate person trying to get someone else to be bullied for once.

Cheeky Boy

I was, you know, one of the class comedians.
Often. I would be the one..
Because I knew that I was one step away from a slap, whereas any of my able-bodied counterparts would immediately get a slap.

I knew I could cheat them one more time before the slap.
And so I was often appointed as the one who would say the really cheeky thing.
Just because I could.

And then I would self-appoint a lot of the time and knowing that I had the amusement of my class to back me up.

But I don't, I can't ever say I ridiculed myself and my own arms in order to curry favour.

Punk

And then punk happened.
Of course, ideal vehicle, you go from being the school spastic to being the school punk. That is an upgrade.

I'm telling you right now,
it's an upgrade,
because it's not about the thing that everybody thinks is negative and embarrassing, your disability, you know.

Mr Slade

We all had to write a five-minute play.
It had to be a famous story done as a five-minute play.
I did this 'Goldilocks and the Three Bears'.
But when Daddy Bear saw Goldilocks, I had Daddy Bear go Woar and it got a huge laugh. From Mr Slade.

And that was it,
I was hooked, that was the moment,
I knew then that I wanted to entertain,
I wanted to write, I wanted to be a performer, because I made my English teacher laugh.

In those days the English teacher always directed the school play.
And I went up and said, 'Mr Slade,
I want to audition for the school play'.

And I, I saw my first fearful smile from an adult.
And it was a fixed,
an unusually fixed smile for Mr Slade with fear in his eyes and falsity on his teeth.

And I thought to myself, oh, that's weird,
he's embarrassed.

The Band

My friends said
let's form a band.
We were thirteen.
And so I bought a drum kit.

And we became this weird teenage band
who were allowed to practice in the cricket pavilion on Saturdays, on Sundays rather.

We were then branded part of the weird people.
But that was when we were thirteen.
By the time we were fifteen,
that had become the cool people.

And the guys who were the army boys, (there were lots of quite sad kids there who didn't go home at holidays.
And they were the ones who'd bullied me earlier and ridiculed me a little, because they were insecure.)

they wanted, desperately wanted to be in the cool gang once it was ascertained that we went to gigs, listened to music and,
dare we say it,
older people smoked pot.

All that started happening.
And girls. So um
I had a very happy childhood.

Being Bad

I enjoyed being in a band.
I enjoyed having this new identity of being a punk but of course that meant being incredibly rebellious, telling the teachers to fuck off and things.

So I did that, and looking back I imagine them wrangling with their liberal, 'Oh God, I have to tell him shut up, but he's like the disabled one, so I've gotta be nice to him.

And I like him
and I want him to succeed, but he's breaking the damned rules.'

I wanted to be bad,
I wanted to be naughty,
it was much cooler and fun,
much more fun than being the school spastic.
That's what I was called.
I mean, yeah.

Flid, obviously, was my name at school, but I was still often a spastic and a spakko and a spasm, all those things.

Bronant Days (1)

I went to a Welsh comprehensive, a Welsh farming comprehensive.
So I went from being one of the thickies, because I wasn't in the alpha class, to the posh cunt, you know overnight.

And on day one this hulking heffalump of a man came towards me
'Well, I'm gonna fight you.
You're new. That's the rules.'

And I was like, oh, okay.
Bam! Had me on the ground, you know I wriggled and struggled, kicked out a few times,
tried to headbutt him,
and he smacked me a few times then stopped, got up and went

'This lad's alright. He had a go.
That's what matters.
Nobody touch him, okay.'

And that was that, never got,
I wasn't really friends with the guy but he was the hardest guy in the school and he put the word out, no-one touch him.
So that was that.

Bronant Days (2)

I think the headmaster had had words with the class, like the assembly before I came was a little laden with now we're going to be having a very special pupil coming.

I got invited to tea, football, buddery all sorts.
But unfortunately punk had got its way into my system.

Dan Jones had a punk badge on.
And I said you like punk, I like punk,
and that was that.

You know he's still my best friend, we met when we were fourteen,
we were the only two punks in Dyfed.

Colchester

He went to an art school and I carried on, got to Colchester and said, Dan, it's brilliant here!
Leave Wales, come here!

There's like bands and everything, and there was, and he came,
we finished our second year,
I was eighteen by that point, my thalidomide compensation had kicked in,
and perhaps foolishly my parents allowed me to buy a house.

For twelve and a half thousand pounds, a semi-detached two-bedroom house in Colchester, which became college party central for three years and the band HQ.

I didn't ever shut the back door, there would often be people in my house when I got home, they were always friends, there was lots of smoking pot and shagging and drinking and rock 'n roll, it was super fun. Throughout my A Level college.

And by that point we were in a band, and then we had to move to London, because that's what you do.

Say the Word

People have a very weird relationship with this word. Um, mine was just a non-judgemental,
I'm called a flid, it's thalidomide, they can't bloody, why can't they pronounce thalidomide properly?

You know, flid is now a badge of honour amongst us all, it's what we call ourselves.

But the reason it was flid was because people couldn't pronounce the word thalidomide.

Assessment

Age seven.

At Guy's Hospital, in a waiting room, suddenly see lots of other people with little arms.

Very shocked!

Never seen them before.

This was the assessment.

You know I got an annual settlement of what was then fifteen thousand pounds a year, based on my assessment.

My assessment was as follows.

At that meeting.

Walk into a room.

Mum not allowed,

walk into a room.

Three men behind a desk.

On the right hand side of the room as you walk in by the door a three-tier filing cabinet, metal, old-school, up to about the shoulder.

One chair in front of the desk.

Went and sat on it.

Asked me a few questions, then they said 'Matthew,
in the top drawer of that filing cabinet there are some sweets.

You can help yourself if you like'.

So, fucking drag the chair over,
got on the chair,
opened the drawer, got the sweets, thanks very much, fifteen grand.

Only a year later I realised, and I was angry at my mother.

'Mum, if you'd have told me, I'd have crawled across that.'

Even then, I knew what had happened, how I could have stacked the odds better if only I'd been given the information.

Group Holiday

I found myself being the punk on an all fifteen-sixteen year old hot and horny as hell thalidomide holiday in Corfu with thirty other thalidomides, none of whom else had had sex yet because we were last in the pecking order.
You can only imagine what happened.

I threw Simone in the pool,
I was a bit boisterous,
I threw Simone in the pool
because she was a bloody nag.

We're still, still all know each other,
that first group of fifteen year olds, we all still know each other.

And I'm the best of friends with Simone now. because she was the first of the other flids to politicise
and call herself a disabled person,

I'll never forget it,
because the rest of them, viewed through a Marxist perspective, the collective disability social construct meaning anger that thalidomiders suffered was bought off by the state.

Why should they bother about being able to get on a bus?
Compensation, a house and a Volvo, that's the average thalidomider.

I mean a Marxist perspective would go, yeah, your anger's been bought off by the state, you know, and there's truth in that.
Because very few thalidomides are political disabled people.

Prostheses

There was no collective
'let's all chuck our arms in a bonfire', you know, moment.
God I wish there had been!

But no. we all came to it personally and privately and in different ways.

My experience of that was,
I'd have six-month check-ups with Dr Fletcher at Roehampton, because that was the catchment area.

it was stuff like seeing if I could pull my foreskin back, because I would need to be able to do that for washing, and just see with stuff if I could do.

I was taken into a different room one day by Dr Fletcher, with both my Mum and Dad, who didn't usually both accompany me.

And there were all, the array of every prosthetic arm you've ever seen around the walls.

And we're gonna try and fit you with one of those,
I said, why?

He went, well we.. thought you might like that.
No. No, I don't want that.
Don't want that at all.

And they went, okay!
and just walked me out of the room,
and that was that.
I obviously had quite liberal parents.

Dr Fletcher, later in life, 'cause I,
we became quite good friends.
He said he knew
all those limbs would be rejected.

He know straight off the bat.
They were useless,
and functionality was everything and cosmetic appearance was nothing.

And he said, he knew that they' d all be rejected and live under a bed sooner or later.
But he had to do the bidding of the British Medical Association, he had to try his best.

Wearing the Arms

I came to my false arms for a cabaret gag as an adult.
And I still use them. For gags, on stage purely and simply only.

Because they render you useless,
you can't do anything,
you might only have one finger, but you can work the front door with it, not with your prosthetic arm on you can't,
you can't do anything.

So they are utterly ridiculous and comedic.

Stabbed with the Seed

Every one of us has a hideous teenage school story.
You know Mary Duffy's is probably the worst, because she had no arms and was given the awful gas powered ones.
She went to St Joseph, Mary and the Doodah, you know Catholic nuns' school in southern Ireland and her fucking arms, the gas ran out and she was in its full extension mode, she spent the day in crucifix position.
Can you imagine that?
Having to go sideways through all the doors that day.
Wasn't allowed to take them off.
Now that's trauma. That's trauma.

She's got a poem about that, too which is the thing that made me realise that I was a disabled person.
We all have one person, don't we,
that unlocked us, our coming out if you will.
What happens is you get the seed, you get stabbed with the seed and you can only ignore it for so long, cause it will grow, whether you like it or not.
And she stabbed me with the seed, with that poem called 'Whole', about how she saw herself as a whole person, not unfinished.

Nijmegen

I saw this poem called 'Whole' and it, it injected the seed of disability into me and I thought I should go and find this woman.

And then we spent like a day and a half together, she basically hauled me over the coals.

The trouble with you is you don't even think you're disabled, you don't even know what disabled is.
I mean I really got it in the neck, cause I was being Flash Harry in the band, you know with the dreadlocks.
And she's sort of like, you're one of us
whether you like it or not,
you're gonna have to come to terms with it and I'm gonna make you right now.
And she did
and I have her to thank for that,
for ever and ever and ever.
And a great conference.

Mary Duffy got me my disability consciousness.
I saw it as a social construct,
I realised I was one of them, and when I came back to London
I had a fire lit under me like you've never seen.

Punks Liked Me.

I got my bus ticket and I went to the Rock Against Racism march, had my first Special Brew, remarkably strong lager, totally overwhelmed me as a young fifteen year old.

Marching, I'm like half falling over.

And the truck comes past with a punk band playing on the back.
And the lead singer leans down and gives me his hand,

'cause he just spots me straightaway as someone who needs a hand, and yanks me,
and pulls me onto the truck and I spent the second half of the march to the gig on the back of the Ruts DC Truck.

Malcolm O
committed suicide
the following year.
Amazing! You know.

Disco and Punk

Punk was huge to me
as it spoke to me.
It was a music that didn't require me to be able-bodied.

At discos I wasn't welcome.
Because I looked wrong.
Several times bouncers wouldn't let me in.

And they're like, no offence mate, but you're gonna put some of the customers off, so sorry, not tonight, you know.

They'd think they were being liberal and nice about it, but that's not the message you receive, you know.

So disco, you had to be body perfect to be disco.
And punk
was the antithesis of disco, so of course I leapt at it,

It didn't require me to be anything other than myself.
With an added safety pin.

No More Crusty

There were these two sexy girls on Oxford station and I saw them look, and I'm an expert at the looks.

And they looked and there was an initial disturbance from my hands, which was superseded by their wonder at my amazing dreadlocks and how crusty, how damned crusty I looked,

I looked like a real one,
because my clothes,
I had been one for four or five years and so it looked,
I didn't look like I'd just put it on at a shop.

And their look changed from disturbed by the disability to admiration of the fashion. And in that instance I said, I have got to get rid of all of this
I don't need this fucking identity.

I need my identity,
I'm fucking disabled damn it.
I'm not like that.
It was a huge moment for me.

Backstage

I grew up,
people learning lines,
people learning songs,
actors laughing loudly
because they were a bit pissed.

I grew up backstage,
you know childcare is free if you just get the kid to the theatre and then they have the run of the place and they know where they're not allowed and everything else is okay.

And you learn theatre behaviour.
So when I became an actor and I went backstage as an actor it just felt like home. It was weird.

'Ubu'

My Mum had said there's this play on, called 'Ubu', at the Oval House.
Might go, wanna come?
Disability company, dunno.
I didn't do disability in those days as far as my Mum was concerned.
So, looking back, they were obviously like, it's about time we got this fellow to his natural home.

My brother came, I mean thinking about it, it was probably a pincer movement on my family's behalf, cause I was, the second that show opened I was hooked, the second,
I just remember thinking, what the fuck is that guy saying?

Jamie Beddard, cake in his mouth, cerebral palsy, didn't give a toss.
I looked round, and here's the big thing, no-one was embarrassed.
This was the big thing to me, they were all able-bodied people, mostly,
they were laughing, and enjoying it.
Disabled people don't necessarily have to be embarrassed by being on stage.
They can be good, and entertain, and hit all the marks that an entertainer needs to hit.

I do want to be an actor.
I don't want to be in my band any more.
Knock knock knock Graeae.
And that was all within twenty-four hours.

I told my band, I said
I've got to go off and be disabled now and they went,
we were kind of wondering when that was gonna happen.

We kind of sensed it for the last two or three years.
Away, go, be happy.

Moving On

I had a bit of embarrassment between my like punky, musician group that I'd been with for fifteen years, that community,
very much who rejected all politics as being PC bollocks and so to say I'm disabled and proud sounded a bit like PC bollocks to them.
So I lost maybe fifteen percent of my friends at that point. No,

I just didn't bother calling them anymore because I knew they'd be thinking it was PC bollocks.
And they didn't call me to tell me it wasn't.

But I gained so many more people that it was more than worth it.

Fighting Talk

I got my highs from martial arts training, that kind of exhilarated adrenalised feeling
I got from punk, still, and from martial arts.
And not so much the, the, the drugs.

The second I was in that community
I was treated like an equal, because my kicks were just as tough as their kicks.
And I could keep people at bay with my kicks and I got pretty damn good at it and that, I got respect as an equal.

Not, 'I will cerebrally recalibrate my brain to assume you are equal even though deep down I'm fighting against the feeling that you're lesser than me because you have less limbs'.

I just had a
'dude, you can beat me up as well as I can beat you up, you're an equal'.
It was not more complicated than that,
so it was hugely attractive to me.
Because I'm part of another community, there's always been a bit of a fighter, a warrior in me,

'What the Butler Saw'

I got the job at Graeae, I was offered a role, I auditioned for and got offered a role of Dr Prentice in
'What the Butler Saw'.

And had my first show.
Very, very funny,
a blind Dr Rance is genius when he gets the gun out.

And from 'What the Butler Saw',
I got an Equity card!
And an agent,
from my first professional play.

Six months later, my agent got me a job in a fringe production, that had nothing to do with disability.
It came and went and nobody really noticed, but that's not the point.

I was in an actual play, on stage, as an equal.

Sealo the Seal Boy

The only time I ever saw pictures of disabled people in writing was at freak shows.

And they all went, no, no, no, you can't touch that with a barge pole.
It's the pornography of disability.

I was a crip.
Fuck it, I'll critique freak shows.
And I found
quite the opposite,

I found a much more layered experience of disability.
You know, fiscal independence was actually part of this,

And then I saw him. In a picture.
A man with flippers.
I thought 'Ah,
I'm gonna do a play about him.

'Born Freak'

I wrote 'Sealboy Freak' Did it at Chat's Palace, at the ICA, rewrote it, disability arts festivals, nice cheap easy show,

just me and a suitcase.
So I've sort of ended up doing it around.

Paul Sapin, (who'd done an arty documentary about disabled women's sexuality) and me found ourselves talking and he said, you wanna do a documentary about freak shows?

And I was like, yes, I do.

And we went to Channel Four,
I came in, flapped my flippers a bit, and said 'Yes, I can speak English' and went away again.

And then he pitched it.
Three hundred and twenty five grand.
That's how much we got.
So we made a film.

'Happy Birthday Thalidomide'

It was the other story that I had to tell, which was, you know they were still using thalidomide in Brazil, it was used in, (this was twelve, however many years ago now) just sniffing around oncology, ten million terminally ill cancer patients being prescribed thalidomide.

It was just beginning the trials, now it's proper, you know, policy.

I remember it,
there was a really weird bit during that,
he said look, you know, when you do documentaries, they like to catch the real and if they know you're the sort of performer who can do real and still perform and carry those two things simultaneously, they've got gold

because that's the stuff of a good documentary.

And he said look,
we're going to show you some,
the woman in here that we're going to interview is using Thalidomide.

It's in the house.
And you're going to look at it.
And I want it on film.
Can you handle it?
I said, of course I can handle it, can you handle if I burst into tears or kick the wall? He said, well we were hoping for something like that.

I said well I can't promise anything,
I'm not going to fake anything.

I walk, we go to this house, it's a breeze block shack in the middle of a favela with no windows and a rag where the door should be.

This woman is in abject pain, she's got leprosy, right?
Abject fucking pain.
Only the most heartless thalidomider would resent someone using it as a pain..
She's not going to have kids.

Anyway, the camera's on my shoulder,
I can feel it burning the back of my neck, you know we walk in,
I sit down and they show me the thalidomide.

And I'm looking at it and I'm waiting for all these emotions, and they're there but I'm really confused and it, and Kit pushes it, it's like, so what are you thinking?

I was going oh, you know,
I was just looking,
I just turned to the camera and said well it's not how I expected but it's pretty fucking weird to actually hold the drug, you know...

It was, it was kind of weird, you know, so he caught all those wonderful moments, you know, that are real, and the stuff of real, when it's real the audience feel it.

We all get a little chill, you know, it's amazing.

'Every Time You Look at Me'

It rated as BBC2's highest drama for audience satisfaction that year.
And any non-disabled actor who'd been given the lead in a new film that was that popular would have automatically gone through the grooming station of the BBC, where you would have got your episode of 'Cracker', your small part in a returning series.

And if that worked out well, they'd promote,
and if it didn't they'd fade away.
But it always happens.

But of course somebody at some point about a year later suggested me for a programme, and the head of casting (this is verbatim) said,
'Mat Fraser? Oh no,
we've done Mat Fraser.'

Very, very painful words for me to hear.
Because what she meant was
we've done his impairment.
We've done short arms.

I was like yeah, okay, I get it.

(I wish I knew who it was because I'd like to go and forgive them.)

Cage Fight

I did a cage fighting documentary in 2004, which was a hundred and ten grand after the two hundred grand one.

And it became apparent that the documentary wasn't going to get made unless I allowed myself to become the subject of the documentary.

And I was slightly aware I was whoring myself.
And, you know, I ended up actually having a cage fight with a seventeen year old.

Cor bloody hell the owner of that must have been worried for insurance, a cripple and a seventeen year old illegally potentially hospitalising each other in a cage that he owned.

There was a little discussion backstage, certain moves were not gonna be allowed to combat that. And to safeguard my face.
I didn't want to have my nose broken.

Anyway. I did that, but at that point I knew I didn't wanna do another documentary.
Because if that's what they'd become,
I didn't want in.

Gatekeeper

You can't blame an individual for a society's failings.
But you can sure look at the gatekeeper and go
'Why d'you keep it locked all that time, bitch?'
Why? You could have done so much.
And at every twist and turn you went 'Yes, massa'.

I think of all those things I could have done, all those roles I could have had.
all that society we could have changed, all those minds we could have changed, all those careers we could have encouraged, all those awards that would have led to other careers, to other commissions that didn't happen because she is a fucking Tory.

Now it's unfair to blame her.
But there are lots of people like her.
Okay, it's really unfair.

You know what? I admonish myself for blaming the gatekeeper of the little slit in the wall when I should have been having a go at the wall.

But when I've got nobody else to be angry with...

'Cast Offs'

I heard a rumour there was going to be a drama in Channel Four,
a pretend documentary about one of those things where you put people on an island and see if they can survive.

And I just wasn't getting a nod.
They wanted nine fucking disabled actors, or six disabled actors. And they didn't call me.

And I realised. Somebody there doesn't like me.
(I said to somebody,
'Clean the fucking mops out of the disabled toilet, you wanker.
It's not a fucking storeroom.')

I'd pissed off a lot of people in Channel Four.
And now they were in bigger positions.

So I did what Mat Fraser always does.
And I just looked in Contacts, found the name of the production company, called them up and said hi,
I know you're looking for disabled actors,
I know you won't be able to find enough, please let me come in and talk myself into the show.
They laughed and went okay, come on in.

They'd auditioned everybody and only four of them were good enough.
For them, at that time.
(They were casting for impairments.)

I left that meeting half an hour later having got the job. Because I said, you need an older person, write it for me, I'll help you write it, around, you know around my impairment or what have you. But for fuck's sake can we all agree that I should be in this fucking programme?

The person who said no
had a grudge against me, so I just went round him.

And I've always done that ever since,
and I probably always will.

Double Medical

Sitting with a writer
at a BBC workshop,
I said, of course it'd be weird if a thalidomide guy got cancer and then got prescribed thalidomide, that'd be pretty weird.

And his jaw dropped open, and he started salivating and he went, fuck me, it's a double medical, Holby are gonna shit themselves on that.

I think we've got it, we've got it.
I'm gonna write it,
I'll liaise with you for like medical facts and shit, alright.

They immediately bit it and I did an episode of 'Holby City'.

The Invitation

I was dealing pot about, around about town, only to weirdos. And I got asked if I would go to Submission, this shop in Camden that sold rubber stuff.
And I'm an old, I'm a perv, I'm kinky,
I don't know any disabled people who don't,
who are over forty who have a sexuality there isn't a kink in somewhere. I don't know of one.

Marisa Carnesky, the performance artist, was earning money in reception, and she got me to a bigger network of those people, because my pot was good. And eventually
I was dealing to all these rubber people all the time.
And I was like, oh what's all this rubber stuff?
Come to the club sometime, we'd love to have you.
You know, well I've got nothing to wear, well wear this. Um, and I went.
And I got hit on like four times.
In the first five minutes..

I didn't think, stop to think it's because I was the weirdest freakiest person there, and that was a badge of honour there, because how perverted can you be than fucking the cripple. I just thought, fucking hell, I'm gonna get laid here.
Everyone seems to smile and loves it, and there's all these naked people running around,
I am in fucking heaven.

And er I, you know,
I sort of interrogated a little bit what was going on and then I thought I don't really mind, it's a fairly good payoff.
And just went a lot.

Submission

I went to Record and Tape Exchange, I was upstairs and this guy came in with a big bin bag of stuff that like clinked inside, I said, what's that?
He said it's a prostitute, she's just shut up shop.
And the whole lot's a job lot of all the stuff she used to use in her dungeon.
Thirty quid the lot. I went: done!
Didn't even look in the bag.

And we fucking costumed up like the Five People.
There was so much stuff in there.
(We gave it a good clean.)
And so we started to go to Submission, the club, that I could get into for free because I was the dealer.

The big moment was when Kitty Kickboxer, the hottest thing I'd ever seen on two legs, walked up to me and said,
well aren't you something special?
I said I dunno, am I?
(Thinking what do you mean?!)

She said are you free for the next half an hour?
I was like, yep!
And she took me round the back and shagged me.

That Whole Fetish Thing

So, that whole fetish thing, again like the freak show thing, was a sort of politically ambiguous, in terms of disability politics, place where we were put centre stage immediately.
And celebrated. And who's to say it was the wrong kind of celebration.
I know lots of people will,
and have done. But I've been there.

And it's very difficult to gauge, it's ambiguous at best, it really is.
And there are a lot of positives about it.
I mean for fuck's sake
if a perv is a perv
and they have sex with a disabled person without thinking that they're less sexual,
for me that's a good thing.

I dunno, it's complicated.

Julie

I was moonlighting
and we met on the stage of the Coney Island freak show doing a burlesque show.

It literally was the beginning of 'The Freak and the Showgirl'.
Um, great show,
huge amount of attraction,

I must, I know I fancied her.
Because I taught her how to do a rear naked choke, which is how to choke someone out

and kill them.
And I only ever did that with women that I fancied.

She is bored in her marriage, her husband is about to come out as gay, and she suddenly meets this really articulate English guy who teaches her how to kill someone and then leaves.

She was smitten!
I was smitten.

Burlesque

And Julie was like
'Come to America!'
And she is royalty
in burlesque.

So she said
I want you to host my next show.
And it was rammed!
And I was good.
And everybody loved me.

And I got everyone
to bark like a seal.
And was really politically incorrect around my disability.

But in the way that I do it, the owning it way.
Not let's make fun of other people who are not like us.

But I'll make fun of myself and it's really cool,
don't you think this is a cool way to clap, why don't you all try it..

And they loved it, they couldn't believe what they were seeing and I was the new crip..

I was English and new and they were bored
with all their hosts.

So overnight I became like one of the most popular hosts In New York. And as I said to Dirty Martini,

that happened, she said, yeah, well
you married into royalty didn't you?

Progression

When I arrived in New York in 2008, when I started being Mat Sealboy the burlesque MC in downtown New York, they loved it,.

And then three years later when I said you know there's this thing I don't agree with and I'd like you all to not agree with it as well, they all went with it.
They didn't even think twice.

And it's extremely gratifying that that happened. And I know now that if, if I needed to call a demo on a shop, I know I could galvanise thirty people and I know only five of them would be disabled.
It's pretty good.
Not bad. Not bad at all.

But then what we're witnessing right now, Allan, are re-politicisation of the youth, I believe.
God, It's been long enough coming, innit?
There've been times in the last twenty years when I've smashed my head against the wall.
But now, they're looking at the shit they've got coming and they don't like it.

But I think what we as disabled people are currently experiencing is what women and feminism was experiencing maybe fifteen years ago where young women are going no no no, don't need to do all that, we're equal.
Are you? Are our wages equal?

So disabled people are now like, don't want to be identified as..
I remember Lisa Hammond saying don't say 'crip', I hate that word, I hate that word crip.

Because what she meant was it means all you political lot and I'm not like that.

Cause my friends don't like political people, because that's PC gone mad.

And this is my connectivity-going-on analysis.
And so, so now
we've got our youngsters going no no I'm not one of those angry disabled people that you don't like,
I'm one of the good ones that you like,
or I don't know what's going on Allan, but I feel that I'm, well you know let's see who gets into power, let's see how many more rights are taken away before we feel the vitriol of the young disabled people again.

'Beauty and the Beast'

Julie had said
we need to do a project together,
'cause at that time we couldn't really manifest our real desires, so we channelled it through art.

I said, yeah, yeah sure,
let's do a project.
'Thalidomide the Musical' worked well, me expanding to allowing myself to work with one non-disabled person.

Let's see what it's like.

And she said why don't we just do 'Beauty and the Beast'?
And it was like a light bulb.

First I thought, ah,
of course, fairy tales.
Adaptations for disability.
Then I thought 'Bitch!

How could you have that idea and not me? I'm the disabled one.
I should have thought of that.'
But I thought hats off, you thought of it.

Phelim McDermott

We had the meeting.
And what happened was me and Julie tried to explain Beauty and the Beast to him as a couple with one of their favourite stories, they take each other over,
they finish each other's sentences.
And he pulled back . And he watched Mat and Julie
try to explain 'Beauty and the Beast'.

And he went, I'll do it, but only if it's about you two as well.
I wanna use old-fashioned technology, like an overhead projector, cause I'm sick of fucking 3D computer imaging.
And I want it to be about you two and 'Beauty and the Beast' in parallel.

We looked at each other and thought.
'That's bloody weird.
Great! Let's go!'

So we ended up doing 'Beauty and the Beast' at Christmas at the Young Vic.
Which was amazing.
And we got good reviews,

so good that our local theatre in New York said we've just got a hole,
a company's just dropped out for next March,
d'you wanna come and do that show?

We said 'yes!'

Review

In the taxi home
we got a text from Phelim going you should read the New York Times.
We were like, oh crap.

And we read it and it was the best review they'd ever given for any theatre production ever.

He said, 'watching this show is like falling in love'. I mean it was, you couldn't get a better review, right.
It was great, because it meant the rest of the run was a sellout and we almost made our money back.

Which is real success, you know.

A woman from LA was in New York.
Saw that review,
decided to go, went to it.
The second she saw me on stage it triggered 'Oh, yeah, my friend's auditioning freaky people

right now in L.A.

I should probably tell them about this guy, he can act.'
The next day I got an audition for 'American Horror Story'.

Off-Broadway Blues

We almost got an off-Broadway run of 'Beauty and the Beast' and then it, just as we were about to sign the contract they lost their bottle.

And the bottom line there, is you know, Britain, they don't mind a bit of flipper and penis onstage, it's all in the name of modern drama, after all we had 'Romans in Britain', didn't we.

You know, we can take it, even in the arts centres in Cumbria we can take it.

But you go outside of New York in America and you try and ask somebody to tolerate a mutant penis, a mutant who's got his penis out onstage and it ain't happening buddy, it ain't happening,

even at the most experimental places, they couldn't take it up 'em, sarge.

The Call

I actually had to run back to England, get back on the drum kit and go out to Germany with Graeae to do another run of 'Reasons to be Cheerful'.

I got the call
while we were getting bladdered in one of those weird German hotels where there were no other guests, but it looks like the Hitler Youth used to holiday there, we were in Bavaria or something .

Graeae on the lash,

fifteen of us really going for it and I get a call and have to go outside to the corridor and I'm speaking to casting from L.A.

And I don't fucking know what 'American Horror Story' is,
I had to look it up on YouTube to get the acting style to do the audition right.

And it goes
we'd like to offer you a part.
Well, tell me a bit more about it,
I said,

(drunk, in Germany, having drummed with me Graeae buddies in the other room, ).

Non-disabled actors
are playing some of the freaks?
Mmm. I dunno how I feel about that.
I'm gonna need twenty-four hours to think about this, okay.

And there was silence

on the other end of the phone.
No one had ever. Ever,

I mean I didn't know what I was doing,
they were like err, okay.
And I put the phone down on them.

And the next day I said so I've got this situation and they were WHAA?, all the young guys,
all the young kids in the company were going

'American Horror Story',
what are you doing?
I said, oh, I've obviously missed a trick here.

And so I called back.
Yeah, I am quite keen.

Negotiation

They wanted to tattoo, they wanted to fit me as a square peg
into their already existing round hole.

And I said, no, what you're looking for is the guy, the tattooed man, you've found out he can't act and now you want me to play his part, well that's not going to work.

You have to make him a seal boy, because that's what I do and then I'll agree to be tattooed and we call him the Illustrated Seal Boy.

And you get your tattoos,
I get authenticity,
I know how to play it and believe me it'll be better.

Go and look at your history.
Look at my body, look at the history, you'll know I'm right.
And then we can discuss.

So again, they had to go off and come back.
And they were like,
yeah okay, we'll go for it.

Now we want you tattooed completely from head to waist.
I went no,
not doing my face.

They were like who is this fucking guy?
Who does he think he is?
But I knew.

I know my money is my hands, but I also know the combo of the face and the hands is a conundrum for a lot of people.

Plus you get it all in one shot, one tight shot, in a mid close-up you can have the impairment and the face, right?

I know, I get that,
done enough telly to understand.
And I knew, for my career and my longevity that we needed to see my face. So I just held out.

Reflections

When I did
'American Horror Story: Freak Show' several million disabled people saw themselves reflected for the first time on television in a long time.

They don't have short arms, they weren't in a freak show, but they saw themselves in a way they hadn't done when they saw A. N. Other person.

And I got told how wrong I was getting it by a lot of people.

And that's fine, I understand that,
I tried to answer every one of them with a realistic appraisal of how unrealistic
the television industry can be.

I'll Stick with the Freak Show Stuff

Sooner or later someone with a lot of money is going to put their money where their mouth is and cast real people in the roles and it'll be high budget.

Then everyone.. I'll be in it, then everyone'll know me and then I'll get work as an actor.
That's my strategy.
It has, actually,
secretly been my strategy for the last ten years.

And it worked,
except it didn't work because I just did pilot seasons in L.A., and I'm here to tell you, you may be unsurprised to learn this Allan, I'm ashamed for having forgotten it, they have no intention of giving me a job in Hollywood.

I was right for the freak show, but they can't see me as a neighbour or a father or a teacher.

No way, No way!

Conventional Behaviour

I go to conventions and I sign my ten by eights at horror conventions for a line of people who tell me I'm their favourite.

And mostly, they are fifteen to twenty-five year olds inverted commas misunderstood young woman, the goth in their town, right, no one understands.
Mat understands,
because he's different.

No he fucking doesn't, but okay.
And so I get the most delicious cultural phenomenally revolutionary moment where the nervous thirteen year old -

I did a lot of kissing and saying I love you on 'American Horror Story' so I was the romantic one - come up to me with their nervous father, who's taken her there, right.

He's younger than me,
she's emoting in a sexualised, emotional way, she's not coming on to me because she's fifteen and I'm fifty-four and that would be wrong for all of us.

But something is going on where she acknowledges my sexuality and she's asking for hers to be acknowledged in the way that young girls do ask, in their wildly inappropriate way that they do, and they don't understand why it's inappr - all of that.

And I simultaneously had to give her what she needs, make it okay and invisibly transmit to the dad it's alright, mate I'm not a paedo, I'm doing this for the cause, right.

Get a grip, I know you know that,

I know that's why you've brought her here, because you approve of it. I get it.

What I'm doing here is going to last her for the rest of her life. and we all know we have to do this.

So then I have this interaction with her, and I go 'and how do you spell Lizzy?'
And I go Lizzy Hotness or something.
Exclamation mark! things.

I push it just as much as it's appropriate to push it inappropriately, it's appropriate inappropriateness, cause that's my job.

I go away and then that girl in three years time will go to the school prom and she might say,
to that guy with one arm or the guy in the wheelchair,
'd'you wanna date?'
where she might not have beforehand.

And I'm aware that all that is potentially resting on this cultural interaction.

And so,
when you say don't do the TV thing, Mat, yeah but when you do then you get it, you get all of this,
and that's really powerful.

Look at Me Now

And when you get as an actor to show your universal humanity as a character, what you are is transcended by who you are.
And no-one cares what you are any more, because they care about who you are.

(And the irony of having to wait around for seventeen years in order to portray a freak, to be allowed to show my universal humanity is not lost on me.)

So I've got twenty thousand young women followers, all of whom would have been abjectly embarrassed to meet me before 'American Horror Story' because they wouldn't have known how to shake my hand.

Now none of them give a fuck about how to shake my hand,
'cause they've seen the essence of the human inside.

The Plan

The other thing is that the first people that go there, that it's well written,
well directed, well acted and has some exotic looking people, disabled people in the leads and they let them go

'NO I WILL NOT!' and cry and do the big fucking stuff, the big dramatic stuff, the first one that gets through the gate on that will win all the awards.

And then all the floodgates will hopefully open.
This is the plan, right?
And I very much want to be a part of that movement.

What's annoying is that,
since 'American Horror Story' I've talked to the entire writing team at Twentieth Century Fox and I have had, I have had meetings you can only dream of...

I can see they don't believe me.
They don't understand.
And they're wrong! I said look, you're all, no offence but scrabbling around looking for a hit and it's all in front of you.
And none of you have got the guts to have it.

Crisis

I want the right to be in it, to be seen in the mainstream stuff, because otherwise how will I and then dot dot dot what I'm fifty four what am I doing?

I'm having an existential crisis.
I am, no I'm actually at this moment going through it.

I broke down about a week ago, told Julie everything.
She thinks I should go and have therapy,
I probably will.

Trouble is, Allan,
I don't trust non-disabled people to give me the therapy.

How do I know they won't read stuff into it?

Freak Show

We did a live documentary, live interview with Dick D. Zegan on the stage at the freak show.

I'm like, I want to know what it's like, the experience of the freak.
And he said, and this was real, well you either shit
or get off the pot don't you?
I'm inviting you to be in the freak show this weekend. That's how you're gonna know.

And, I'm put on the back foot and I agree.
And it's a real moment
that's caught on camera and you can see that.
And though, I did it, and we did it,

I didn't enjoy the bally platform.
I found that quite difficult.
They have the guy on the platform outside going come on in,
you're gonna see this,
you're gonna see that, and you don't,
you know there was a,
you just get looked at and they come in whether they're fascinated enough by your physical difference or not, you know.

Um, so that's the exploitative end of the freak show. Definitely.
Once you're inside of course, the beautiful thing
is that you're the one talking.
And they have to listen to you.

And there's an honesty about a freak show.
So, you know, you don't have to wonder,
I wonder if they're only here because they're looking at my arms, you know they're only there, right.
And then, they have to listen to what you say.

So basically, I did it. And the cameras all went away, and he was like nononono,

I let you and all the cameras in here for free.
I want you to work the freak show tomorrow, with no cameras, all day, to pay me back. And he meant it,
I was like fuck! Er..okay.

So I did the show eight times.
I saw lots of poor black and hispanic and drunk white people marvel at my work,
I realised I had never entertained them before, I had only ever entertained disabled people and middle class people before.

They weren't embarrassed about looking at my arms.
They saw no shame in it.
They were genuinely interested to hear about thalidomide.
Of which they knew nothing.

They were even more interested to hear that the FDA banned it back in the day when they used to do their job, little laugh, ooh I'm onto something.

Because of course Vioxx, you know, hey, you've got us to thank for the warning on the drug thing, happy to give a little love back.

Get a laugh, I think oh, this is the way to go.
So I do standup. I do political standup , I explain my arms, then I do political standup, then go but I'm a traditionalist, so I'm gonna end with a feat of skill, you're gonna go wow look at that he can do that with his arms.
So I do a bit of drumming.
I do 'Guess that Tune' on the drums. It's super fun.

And I realise that I'm educating people in many many ways.
Literally, about my bone structure,

I know it sounds so odd that the best disability arts work that I've done in New York is at the freak show.
But they were the first theatre in New York to become fully wheelchair accessible for performers. Isn't that ironic?

Face-off

Some guy wanted a fight,
'Right here, right now buddy'.
So the dwarf guy goes, come on Mat, and I follow him in.

He gives me two baseball bats, takes two himself,
we're coming out there we'll beat those fuckers up.

So I'm like, literally, what?
So we come out and we're facing off these guys
with baseball bats.

Now when you and a dwarf and a guy with a tattooed face are on the bally platform
with baseball bats,

facing off a gang
who want to fight you and you come off that,
you feel like a comrade,

you feel like you've never felt before, this is real, this is back like it would have been in the fifties at the circus, you know.

It's a camaraderie,
between community and camaraderie, and a crip feeling, you know.
But I was just hooked.

Family Fun

Julie came down one day,
with her besties,
Bambi the Mermaid and Bunny Love.

Three blonde strippers, out for a day in Coney Island, licking ice creams
and going to the freak show.

And I was like,
this is my new family.
I've got freaks down here in Coney Island, who are accepted up in Manhattan, on the cabaret stages where I'm allowed to host,

in the sold-out show with these people who are the most famous striptease artists in all of New York.

What's not to like?
This is not being rejected, this is not
'oh no we've done Mat Fraser'.

This is very different, this is 'Wow! We love and want Mat Fraser!' So I just dived head-first into it, didn't I?

New Crips on the Block

As the Great Fredini recently observed to me, he said Mat,
when you started,
back in 2000, doing this, 2001, you were literally
the only born freak doing it.
And it was called the pornography of the disabled, wasn't it?
I said, yeah,
you've done your research, it was.

He said, now,
with all these new kids coming in,
It's like it's their new rock 'n roll.
And he banged it right on the head.
Because these young kids coming in, lots of deformed kids are joining sideshow.
But they're learning pulling up things with nails, or their nipples, or banging a nail in their head or flesh-hook hanging with flippers.

Stanley Berent (Sealo the Seal Boy)

You know, lest we forget, and I always remind people, in the thirties
what would it have been like to be disabled, little flippers?

He was fiscally independent and kept all five members of his poor Polish family from Philadelphia clothed, housed and fed for his entire career.
He was very proud of that.

In the seventies it had a different focus to the late forties maybe, and he went to court in 1973 to demand the right of the freaks, because they, people said we want the circus but we don't want the freak show, it's in bad taste. And he went to court in 1973 to demand the right, and he won that year
but the following year it was over.

That Whole Freak Show Thing Really Stuck with Me.

I know what it's like to be a freak.
I mean, I've literally done it, week in, week out.

I did, one year I did the whole summer season.
Eight shows a day,
six days a week
for fifteen weeks or something.
I mean, it was brutal.
And I learnt the value of the single dollar.
You're only paid
seventeen fifty an hour there, or I was.
Literally have to wait until you've earned your first ten bucks before you can have a sandwich, you know.
You really, money so changes down there.
And I'm grateful for that, because I didn't know the value of the single dollar until I did the freak show.

Then I got work in Manhattan.
And they were like
two hundred quid
to get your knob out for five minutes.
It would take me a week to earn that in the freak show.
So I started working there less and less.

But I'm still royalty,
I'm considered royalty down there.
I was the first one to come back.
In the politically correct days.
I was the first one to arrive and go, no, this is okay, it has agency,
I mean let's discuss this.
I was the first one to say that in America.

Quality of Life

It might not be, might be tomorrow.
Then good.
There's a lot of young 'uns out there.
Things are changing.

So it's good,
I manage not to go crazy.
I'm still alive,
I have a few battle scars,
but they're not too bad.
You know, I'm not dead
like some of our compadres.
Some people have committed suicide.

I'll always remember that kid with the ginger hair.
On the meetings, on the demos.
With the crutches.
Fucking committed suicide.
'Cause of the hopelessness of the projections of his life that he saw them at that time.

And he just..
And it brings it home now, assisted suicide stuff, you know.
We can't judge other people's quality of life.
Period. We can't do it.
The only person that can judge the quality of life is the person. You know.

In Community

I've always benefitted
from being in community,
and always found strength and identity
from being in community.

Trying to combine communities is often difficult.
Your punk mates and your disability mates don't always want to party at the same place.
Funny, enough of them do.

And now, disability's really overcome the embarrassment struggle, I think, recently.
Like, everyone gets it, everyone's going to have to move a little bit when the wheelchair user comes through the chocablock door.

Or in the pub, if a few chairs have to get shifted,
no-one goes tut any more, they just get on with it don't they?
I dunno, I hope so.

I think things have changed a bit and that certain aspects of disability access are taken as given by the general public.

Which makes us all a bit more, which makes society at large a bit more au fait with the disability community and their needs and assimilate to it a bit.

Certainly I've found that with all my friends who, fifteen years ago were the ones that needed telling, they don't need telling any more.
